Part 1.2

Almost the same. The commercial in the background was different.

Part 1.3

We didn't get x-cache in the response. Transfer-encoding is for telling which type of encoding is used.
(<https://developer.mozilla.org/en-US/docs/Web/HTTP/Headers/Transfer-Encoding>)

Part 1.4

OUR RESPONSE: Cache-Control: no-store, no-cache, must-revalidate, post-check=0, pre-check=0

no-store

The cache should not store anything about the client request or server response.

no-cache

Caches must check with the origin server for validation before using the cached copy.

must-revalidate

Indicates that once a resource becomes stale, caches must not use their stale copy without successful validation on the origin server.

(<https://developer.mozilla.org/en-US/docs/Web/HTTP/Headers/Cache-Control>)

Part 2.1

If it is smaller it puts incomplete data but if the content length is larger then the data we send it expects more data than provided so it gives a bad request.

Part 3.1

It doesn't ask for authentication because the browser remembers it and when you reload the page it sends a connection with the correct authentication.
